Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Croesus and Ione But thought her one of us, yet did not dare So much as touch her hand she ruled them so. First Flower Girl Methought the young Lord Ceyx suspicioned her When in his eyes I saw the look they wear For none but Lady Ione. Alas! This disappearance sure will drive him mad. Second Flower Girl And yet she broke no troth in leaving him, Having but laughter ever for his vows; He was too slavish in his love for her. I fear me it is Croesus has her now; Proud maids like her love high, or not at all. Old Man Hush! hush! her brother comes to pray for her. Ah, poor Ismenides! thy step is slow. (Ismenides approaches, supported by an attendant, and enters the temple.) Old Man Has Croesus won the gods, or will they hear? Act II. Scene I. In the royal palace at Sardis. An apartment opening to the east. Rich hangings have been drawn away, disclosing an airy balcony overhanging a garden. The time is a...
