Not illustrated. 1904 Excerpt: .above obtained was established by the hydrochloride of the latter ( $\text{CH}_3\text{OH}_6\text{H Cl}$ ). It is noteworthy that the melting point of pinene hydrochloride was 132.5-133.5C. in my experiment (Corr), This is different from the observation made by Wallach who puts the melting point of the same substance at 125C. (Ann. Chemie, 239, 4) and J. H. Long s report of 131C. as the melting point (Jour of Amer. Chem. Soc. 21, 637). The third fraction (240-270) gave a slight yellowish liquid of a somewhat visicous nature possessing the wood smell of Hinoki. After the liquid was rectified by distillation over sodium under atmospheric pressure the chief fraction was collected between 260-270C. The oil thus separated boils mostly between 267-268C. When the fraction is dissolved in a little glacial acetic acid and is shaken with a few drops of concentrated sulphuric acid, the liquid assumes a faint reddish color which turns to red with a violet tint after a little while. After standing over night, it finally turns to brownish red. The identification of cadinen with this fraction was confirmed by its hydrochloride ( $\text{C}_16\text{H}_{24} \cdot 2 \text{ HCl}$ , m. p. 117-118C.) and hydrobromide ( $\text{C}_16\text{H}_{24} \cdot 2 \text{ HBr}$ , m.p. 124-125). Again, the rectified oil of the original product was distilled under atmospheric pressure in a flask provided with Le-Bel Henninger s stillhead; the fraction distilling under 170C. was collected to the amount of 60 a of the original oil; the substance thus collected is colorless and free from empyreumatic odour. The physical properties...
